Stratagey for reaching 2010 goal: encourage each boy to sell, each boy tries to do a fill it up sheet.

Once you establish your annual budget for your Unit Program needs, divide that figure by the number of boys in the unit and that determines how much each boy should sell.

DEC: Be prepared for winter in the Adirondacks

New York State Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) Commissioner Pete Grannis advises visitors to the backcountry of the Adirondacks to be prepared for snow, ice and cold, and to be sure to use the proper equipment.

"While winter is an opportune time to take advantage of all that the Adirondack Park has to offer, the season can also present troublesome — even perilous — conditions to the unprepared," Commissioner Grannis said. "The snow cover in the Adirondacks is more than three feet deep in the higher elevations. At this time, we require visitors to the Eastern High Peaks to use snowshoes or cross-country skis for their safety, and we strongly recommend that visitors to other parts of the Adirondacks do the same."

DEC Forest Rangers recently rescued two people in separate incidents in the High Peaks Wilderness. Neither of them were fully prepared or equipped for the winter conditions they faced. One man spent two nights in the wilderness in sub-freezing temperatures before being located and taken to get medical treatment.

Snowshoes or skis prevent sudden falls or "post-holing," which eases travel on snow and helps avoid injuries. Ice crampons should be carried for use on icy mountaintops and other exposed areas. In addition, backcountry visitors should follow these safety guidelines.

- Dress properly with layers of wool and fleece (not cotton) clothing: a wool or fleece hat, gloves or mittens, wind/rain resistant outer wear, and winter boots.

- Carry a day pack with the following contents: Ice axe, plenty of food and water, extra clothing, map and compass, first-aid kit, flashlight/headlamp, sun glasses, sun-block protection, ensolite pads, stove and extra fuel, and bivy sack or space blankets.

- Drink plenty of water — dehydration can lead to hypothermia.

- Eat plenty of food to maintain energy levels and warmth.

- Check weather before entering the woods — if the weather is poor, postpone your trip. The mountains will always be there.

- Be aware of weather conditions at all times — if weather worsens, head out of the woods.

- Contact the DEC at (518) 897-1200 to determine trail conditions in the area you plan to visit.

Adirondack Trail Information can be found on the DEC Web site at www.dec.ny.gov/outdoor/7865.html. The Web pages provide general information and seasonal condi-
